

Laura Stack Introduction for Schools

Laura Stack had flown 2 million miles all over the world as a time management expert and bestselling author of 8 books, until her world suddenly changed on Nov. 20, 2019, when her 19-year-old son, Johnny, died by suicide, after he became psychotic from dabbing high-THC marijuana concentrates. She responded by forming the nonprofit, Johnny's Ambassadors, to educate teens in schools all over the U.S. about the dangers of marijuana on adolescent brain development, mental illness, and suicide. Johnny's story has been told in People Magazine, the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, PBS, and on Dr. Phil. Laura is on a crusade to recruit thousands of Johnny's Ambassadors to get teens to #StopDabbing.
