

I will now introduce Hannah Palmer.

Hannah has already dedicated herself to educating young people about the realities and risks of THC use.

She's seen marijuana harm loved ones in her own life and refuses to see it take out the rest of Gen Z.

Hannah worked at Northern Illinois Recovery Center and even interned for the Drug Enforcement Administration in Washington, D.C.

She became a certified trainer with Johnny's Ambassadors, which is a national nonprofit focused on youth THC prevention. Today, she speaks to schools and communities across the country, sharing her story, her insights, and why prevention matters now more than ever.

Let's give a warm welcome to Hannah Palmer.
